Pangolin Conservation

Pangolins are the most trafficked mammal on the planet. They are animals in the shadowlands of extinction.

Bringing Pangolins home

A CONSERVATION EXPERIENCE

Participate in our one-of-its-kind Pangolin conservation experience, and support us in this groundbreaking initiative to re-establish Temminck's [ground] pangolin in a region where they have gone locally extinct.

Join a researcher from our specialist conservation team as they locate one of the pangolins that has been reintroduced to Beyond Phinda Private Game Reserve. A rare window on the world of these shy, elusive and terribly threatened mammals: observe their unique features and adaptations first hand as our researcher does a general health check and downloads critical research data from the UHF tag attached to each pangolin.

This path-finding project, in partnership with the African Pangolin Working Group, is not only the first of its kind for pangolin worldwide, but the research learnings are key to the long-term survival of these intriguing creatures who are the world's most trafficked mammal. All funds raised from this signature experience will go into the project for the purchase of tags, equipment, veterinary costs and the care of all the reserve's pangolins.

TEMMINCK'S PANGOLIN

Research is fundamental to our understanding and protection of this little-known, threatened mammal.

'EARTH'S GREAT GARDENERS'

Pangolins play a crucial role in controlling the stripping effects of ants and termites on wild environments
